Commentary

The final quarter of 2009 saw a continuation of the positive sentiment towards higher risk assets that began at the end of the first quarter. Equity markets continued their rally, particularly in emerging markets, with the notable exception of Dubai which briefly unsettled markets with the near default of a government-backed property company. There is still some debate among economists about the nature and sustainability of the recovery.

Two particular issues are when and how to end the unconventional monetary policy measures pursued by central banks, and when and how much to rein in the fiscal deficits of many governments. Returns to bond markets were mixed over the quarter. There are two schools of thought. First, there are those that fear that the market will not be able to absorb the continued large supply of bonds from indebted governments and that governments might be tempted to stoke inflation to reduce the real value of their debt. Second, some note the enormous slack and deflationary pressures in the world economy and the risk of a slide back into a prolonged recession.
