Commentary

The 'safe haven' status of UK government bonds served them well during the quarter and they rallied strongly. The yield on the benchmark 10-year gilt dropped to 2.1% on 12 September, its lowest level ever. In terms of returns, longer dated government bonds were the best performers overall, delivering just under 15% in the three months.

The Bank of England remains committed to its policy of reviving the economy, leaving interest rates on hold since March 2009 and suggesting that more quantitative easing is a likelihood. This was confirmed in early October when the central bank said it would pump a further £75 billion into the UK economy via its asset-purchase programme.

The policymaker maintains its view that inflation will return to target in the next two years, arguing that price levels have risen because of the VAT increase earlier this year and higher global energy prices.

What is the risk rating?

- › These risk ratings have been developed by Prudential to help provide an indication of a fund's potential level of risk and reward based on the type of assets which may be held by the fund. Other companies may use different descriptions and as such these risk ratings should not be considered as generic across the fund management industry.
- › We regularly review our fund risk ratings, so they may change in the future. If, in our view, there is a material change in the fund's level of risk, for example due to a significant change to the assets held by the fund or in the way the fund is managed, we will provide information on the new risk rating. We recommend that you make sure you understand the risk rating of any fund before you invest. You will find this information at www.pru.co.uk/factsheets
- › You should also consider discussing your decision and the appropriateness of a fund's risk rating with an adviser.
